The recital given Tuesday evening at Central College by Miss Pauline Sellers, being one of the conditions of graduation from the school of vocal music of that institution, was attended by an audience that tested the capacity of Murrell Auditorium and witnessed the popularity of this talented young woman. Lexington music lovers have had opportunities before of hearing Miss Sellers both in solo and choral work, especially in church music, but never before in a programme of widest range affording opportunity for the exhibition of her varied talents, comprehensive study, and minute training. The singer's remarkably sweet voice, a mezzo-soprano of easy control and equal to the demands of a most demanding programme, together with an easy, gracious stage presence, made the triumph of the occasion complete.
The first selection represented the early Italian opera of the strictest classical type. The words are almost meaningless, but there is ample opportunity for vocal display. The singer easily took advantage of this opportunity and her first few tones put the audience entirely at ease.
Two French songs comprised the second group. Lyric in style they call for most intelligent expression. They were both well rendered, the second one being enhanced by the violin obligato. This piece was weird, sad and exceedingly beautiful. Handel's "Come Unto Him" was the first English song on the program. It is majestically solemn and unostentatious. In contrast was the fourth group a recitative and cavatina from the late Italian opera. This demands singing of the most florid character. The cavatina is exceedingly attractive. From the standpoint of mere vocal display this number was probably the best on the program. The runs and turns were exceptionally well done.
The three German songs made an attractive group. The first, the melancholy "Asra," was sung in English and the other two in the original. They are all beautiful and "Ich grolle nicht" is considered by many to be the greatest song ever written. The interpretation of it was unusual. The tempo was set considerably faster than ordinarily and it fitted most admirably the voice of the singer.
But perhaps the most pleasing numbers to the general public were the three Scottish folk-songs, "Mary of Argyle," "My Laddie," and "Bonnie Sweet Bessie, the Maid o' Dundee," familiar songs, long woven into the sentimental life of the English speaking races everywhere. The quality of the singer's voice is admirably adapted to these lyrics, the musical capabilities of which were apprehended with fine artistic appreciation. And especially in the last of the three songs, which in the beginning combines something of heroic with its sentimental elements, then breaks to the dirge-like, and finally to a prayer, the fervency of which was realized most admirably, the singer proved her power and stirred the emotions of her hearers.

The Bach-Gounod Ave Maria with violin obligato by Miss Marcia Sellers is perhaps the most beautiful of this type of melodies religieuses. It was given perfectly in a voice unwearied by the demanding numbers that had preceded it.

The program was concluded with two duets in which the harmony of the voices of the two sisters and sentiment of the two songs combined to make a most pleasing impression upon the audience. It was a picture as well as a symphony and those in whom the emotion of friendship was combined with artistic appreciation were distinctly affected.

The piano accompaniments by Mrs. Alfred Franklin Smith, director of the department of vocal music, were sympathetic and artistically contributory, as all Mrs. Smith's accompaniments are.

A feature which added considerably to the effect of the recital was the artistic decoration of the stage. Prominent were large marble pedestals, entwined with smilax and supporting busts of Mozart and Liszt. The colors of Central college predominated. All over the stage were flowers, mostly roses, carnations and violets. The handsomely gowned ladies with this background made a delightful spectacle.

Miss Pauline Sellers wore an empire dress, with train, of shadow chiffon over taffeta and mousseline de sole. Mrs. Smith wore a Paris gown, in princess style, of Brussels net and real lace with hand embroidery. Miss Marcia Sellers wore a simple light mull dress in princess style.

CONTRIBUTED.

Minnesota Democrats have endorsed the presidential candidacy of Gov. Johnson, and the "son of a washer-woman" looms large on the horizon of the political future. The Republicans of that state who sought to throw discredit on him by reason of the poverty of his parents were not wise in their selection of weapons. It was in resentment of this that he was elected governor when his party was in a hopeless minority, and his wise administration so commended itself to the people of that state that they gave him a second term because they liked his first one. While it seems now that the nomination will go to W. J. Bryan it will be well to keep Governor Johnson in mind in casting your political horoscope.—Linn County Budget.
